Executive Summary

“The look of poverty in your community is ...misleading because poverty can be invisible.”

- Key stakeholder interview

“When I have an unmet need, a lot of times I don't seek help because it feels too stressful or overwhelming. Which is why I appreciate when resources are made as obvious and easily available as possible.”

- Survey respondent

When looking at both the survey responses and the stakeholder interviews, several needs emerge as being the most critical:

- Access to job opportunities, training and financial literacy in addition to financial support is crucial.
- A need for flexible, tailored assistance and one-stop locations for services especially in rural areas.
- The need for affordable housing, childcare and healthcare.
- Strong community partnerships and collaborations are necessary to address the unique challenges of the community.

The PPEP Community Needs Assessment revealed significant challenges related to poverty across Yuma, Santa Cruz, and Pinal counties. Key barriers include health issues, limited job opportunities, high housing costs, long-term unemployment, and lack of access to basic services. Stakeholders highlighted the need for enhanced job training, access to comprehensive support services, affordable housing, and financial literacy programs. Successful past initiatives centered on vocational training and community-based support systems.

Moving forward, a comprehensive, collaborative strategy focused on education, tailored services, and community partnerships will be essential to effectively reduce poverty and improve long-term outcomes.

Recommendations

Based on the findings of the interviews with key stakeholders and the results of the community survey, the following actions are recommended for reducing poverty:

Enhance Job Training Programs: Increase access to vocational training and digital literacy programs to prepare individuals for modern job markets, particularly for those in rural and underserved areas.

Expand Access to Comprehensive Support Services: Develop more "one-stop shops" for services like healthcare, housing, childcare, and financial assistance, ensuring they are easily accessible.

Invest in Affordable Housing: Address housing needs through assistance with down payments, repairs, and utilities, especially for vulnerable populations like seniors and farm workers.

Promote Financial Literacy and Debt Management: Implement targeted financial literacy programs to reduce dependency on debt for basic needs and help individuals manage their finances effectively.

Strengthen Community Partnerships: Foster greater collaboration between nonprofit organizations, community partners, and local governments to coordinate efforts and maximize resources for poverty alleviation.

Stakeholder Interview Analysis

As part of the needs assessment, interviews were conducted with 9 community stakeholders identified by PPEP, Inc. who would be able to speak to the needs of individuals in their communities. These stakeholders represent three of the counties where the organization provides services: Yuma, Santa Cruz and Pinal counties. These stakeholders were asked questions [Appendix 1] related to poverty and its impact on the communities they work with. The overall themes of these interviews are below:

Definition and Perceptions of Poverty

The stakeholders provided a picture of poverty in their communities as multi-dimensional and not always easy to define. They indicated that poverty isn't just about being low income, but that it can encompass a range of factors that can include financial insecurity, cost of living, and lack of access to basic services. It can also encompass more social aspects like a lack of resources, opportunities, or social connections. These factors combine to create a problem that can't be solved with a single solution. They also noted that poverty is becoming even more complex with the rising cost of living without corresponding income increases.

The stakeholders noted that poverty in their area can span generations and is linked to systemic issues like trauma, mental health and the lack of educational opportunities. Moreover, they also noted that poverty is often misunderstood and society tends to blame individuals rather than acknowledge the complex systemic factors that keep people in poverty. They also suggested that environment can keep people in poverty when low expectations perpetuate the myth that there is no way out of their situation. Finally they noted that certain populations in their communities are particularly susceptible to poverty, including; fixed-income groups like seniors and people with disabilities, single parents, and children of immigrant or undocumented parents who don't have access or don't know how to access resources to improve their education.

Barriers to Poverty Alleviation

The stakeholders identified several key barriers that keep families in poverty, focusing on both personal and systemic challenges. Health issues, particularly those stemming from poor nutrition like obesity and diabetes, are a major concern, compounded by limited access to resources and education. Employment opportunities have dwindled as the economy shifts from industrial jobs to service-oriented roles, leaving many workers without the skills needed for newer industries. There is a strong need for programs that address financial literacy and workforce skills, particularly in a job market that increasingly requires digital proficiency.

Generational trauma, mental health issues, and a lack of awareness of available resources are additional obstacles, especially in rural areas or among populations facing language barriers. Long-term unemployment and debt create cycles that are difficult to break, with inadequate unemployment benefits and mounting financial obligations worsening the situation. Veterans face unique struggles with debt as they transition from military to civilian life. Overall, these barriers create a "snowball effect," where the longer individuals remain in poverty, the harder it becomes to escape, underlining the need for more comprehensive support systems including job training, affordable housing, and public transportation.

A World Without Poverty

The stakeholders were asked to envision a world without poverty and to talk about what that would look like. During these conversations three main themes emerged. First, they highlighted the importance of fulfilling basic needs, such as ensuring everyone has access to food, affordable housing, access to public transportation and healthcare. These fundamental resources are seen as essential for individuals to break free from poverty. Stable employment emerged as another key theme, with a focus on the need for financial stability through secure jobs and enhanced financial literacy to help individuals manage their resources effectively. Lastly, social equity was underscored as crucial, with a vision of a society where strong social bonds and solidarity exist across all economic levels, ensuring everyone has equal access to opportunities and support systems necessary for success.

Community Challenges

The stakeholders identified numerous challenges related to poverty in their community. Single-parent families, particularly single mothers, face the dual burden of working multiple jobs while struggling to afford daycare, trapping them in a cycle of poverty. Debt is also a major concern, with many relying on credit cards and loans for basic needs, leading to long-term financial instability. Beyond employment assistance, there is a lack of comprehensive support services that address the broader needs of those in poverty. Communication and coordination issues between service organizations also hinder effective support, particularly around financial responsibilities.

Homelessness is a visible issue, with many individuals experiencing mental health challenges, addictions, or choosing homelessness as a lifestyle but that does not reflect the depth and complexities of the issue. In particular, rural areas face unique challenges such as limited educational resources, language barriers, and economic instability, while border towns struggle with mixed immigration status and the transitory nature of work. Farm workers are especially vulnerable due to fluctuating incomes, underpayment, and limited access to public benefits. The complex and varied nature of poverty across different regions underscores the need for coordinated efforts at both the policy and community levels to effectively address these challenges.

Programs and Initiatives for Poverty Alleviation

When asked to reflect on past initiatives or programs that have been successful in alleviating poverty, the stakeholders highlighted several successful programs. First and foremost, education and vocational training, such as one program for at-risk high school students, were praised for providing practical skills and life lessons that lead to stable employment. GED and citizenship education programs were noted as key to helping individuals improve their economic status, though it was noted that the availability of such programs has diminished since COVID-19.

They emphasized the importance of community support and awareness of available resources, with the concept of "one-stop shops" suggested as a way to centralize services and improve accessibility. Trauma-informed approaches and customized services that meet people where they are, especially for groups like single mothers and individuals in recovery, were also seen as critical. Motivational interviewing and individualized services for job seekers were highlighted as effective in addressing the unique needs of those seeking employment.

Lastly, investment in successful programs, improving coordination, and increasing community involvement were all recommended to build on past successes and create long-term solutions for poverty alleviation. Several noted that, for the purposes of improving overall service delivery, collaboration between nonprofit organizations and community partners is vital.

Recommendations for Future Actions

The stakeholders offered several recommendations for future approaches to alleviating poverty, emphasizing the need for a comprehensive, collaborative strategy. They advocated for improved nutrition and health in schools, noting that children's development is closely tied to their physical well-being, which can impact long-term educational outcomes. Programs that build hope and motivation, particularly for young people, were seen as essential for breaking the cycle of poverty.

In general, a strong emphasis was placed on education as a central strategy for poverty alleviation, with suggestions to use local role models to inspire students. Elevating the voices of the community, particularly parents and students, was also seen as critical to designing effective programs.

Customization of services was seen as particularly important, with a focus on tailoring interventions to specific populations, such as agricultural workers, and ensuring programs are trauma-informed and responsive to unique community needs. Along with this, increased visibility and engagement of organizations like PPEP were encouraged to make services more accessible. Improved collaboration and communication between organizations were stressed, with technology and partnerships playing a key role in enhancing coordination.

Overall, the stakeholders called for sustained funding, targeted efforts, and a focus on long-term solutions rather than temporary relief.

Conclusion

The stakeholders provided a comprehensive understanding of poverty within their communities, highlighting its complexity and the need for multi-dimensional solutions. Key barriers include health issues, long-term unemployment, debt, and lack of access to resources, all of which contribute to the cycle of poverty.

Successful programs in the past have focused on education, vocational training, and community support, emphasizing the importance of practical skills and trauma-informed approaches. Looking forward, the stakeholders stressed the need for collaborative efforts, improved communication, and tailored services to address the diverse challenges faced by vulnerable populations.

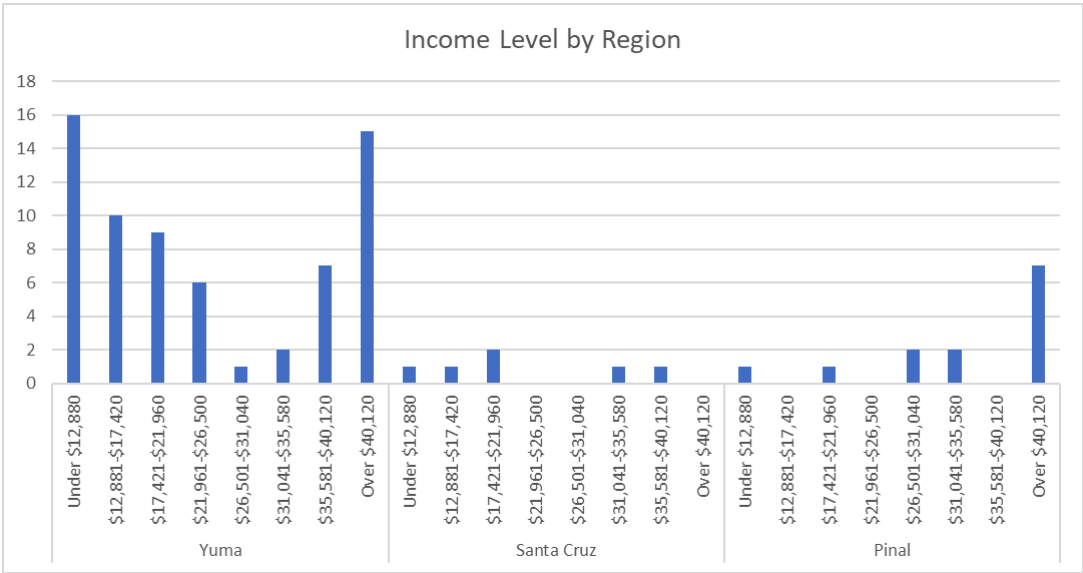

They emphasized that poverty alleviation requires both immediate and long-term strategies, with a strong focus on education, stable employment, and ensuring access to essential resources like healthcare and housing. Sustained investment and coordination among community organizations will be key to creating lasting change.

Resident Survey

A survey was built in Spanish and English and distributed among residents of Pinal, Santa Cruz, and Yuma counties via a link and QR code [Appendix 2]. A total 172 respondents completed the survey, answering most or all of the questions. These surveys were aimed at determining unmet or undermet needs in the area as part of the PPEP Community Needs Assessment.

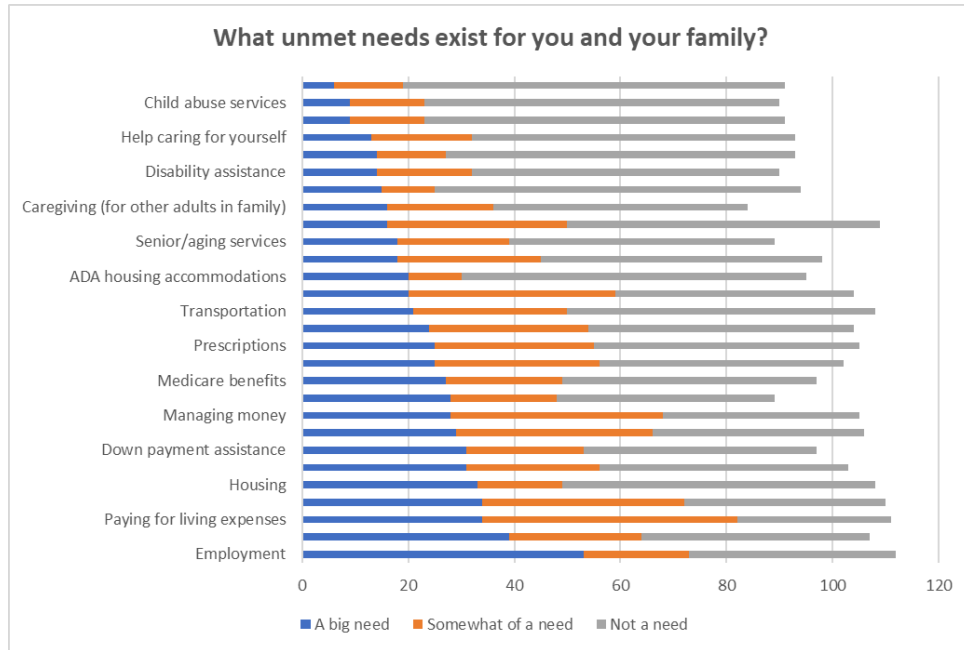

Many respondents to the survey noted that the three biggest needs in their communities are affordable housing, affordable childcare and employment.

The image below represents the income levels by region. Yuma County shows the most wealth but it should be noted that it was also the region that had the highest response rate which might be skewing the data collected.
